SELOUS WALKING SAFARIS

Selous Walking Safaris offer exciting and exclusive walks based out of mobile fly camps, through some of the most diverse and game rich habitats in the Selous. In the 1980s Richard Bonham used this area for his famous portered walking safaris, when it was then all but unknown.

The Selous Game Reserve, at a little over 50,000 sq kms, is one of the largest areas set aside for wildlife preservation anywhere in the world, and is home to such a Noah's Ark of wildlife that it's been made a World Heritage Site. The northern area of the Selous is scenically the most beautiful, dominated by the Rufiji River with dense riverine forests, lakes and swamplands inter-laced with a myriad of water channels. The river changes course constantly creating amazing oxbow lakes that are fringed with palm trees. The walking safari itineraries vary according to the seasons, and weather conditions, but can cover such areas as the river banks themselves, Lake Tagallala, Steiglers Gorge and the Hot Springs. All the walks are led by an experienced walking guide, and accompanied by an armed scout.

The walks - minimum 4 to 5 hours a day - are based out of a fully staffed flycamp; simple, yet well equipped with mosquito net tents, bedrolls with sheets, pillows, and blankets, and a dome tent at the rear for changing and storing luggage. There is a shared long drop toilet, and safari style bucket shower with hot and cold water on request. A full breakfast, light lunch, and three course dinner is served daily, and the drinks are ice cold. Each spot is chosen for its view, or for the game in the area, and allows you to utterly absorb yourself in the Selous wilderness. It's the perfect combination of intrepid adventure and bush comfort.

LOCATION - a variety of stunning locations within the northern Selous Game Reserve.

The great variety of adventures to be had, from the riverside to the surrounding woodlands. Great herds of zebra, wildebeest, buffalo, elephant, hippos and crocodiles.
